BUILDING & BY-LAW ENFORCEMENT DIVISIONS

DO YOU HAVE YOUR PERMIT?

Whether you're a homeowner or a builder it is your responsibility to ensure a permit has been issued prior to commencing construction.

As a homeowner be informed about what projects require a permit, and ensure your contractor has a permit BEFORE starting.

The Building Code Act Stipulates: 1.1 (1) It is the role of every person who causes a building to be constructed,

(b) to ensure that construction does not proceed unless any permit required under the Act has been issued by the chief building official.

Failing to obtain a permit prior to commencing construction can result in costly construction delays, removal of already completed work, legal action, fines, orders and double permit fees being laid.

YOU GOT A PERMIT FOR THAT?

Are You Planning A Project For The Summer?

Did you know according to the Ontario Building Code there are construction projects that require permits?

Some examples of popular summer projects that require a permit from the building department include:

- Building decks higher than 24 inches or attached to a building at any height.
- Structures with an area greater than 10 sq.m (porch, gazebo, greenhouse, garage, etc.)
- Building a shed used only for storage over 15 sq.m.
- Adding an additional dwelling unit to an existing building.
- Exterior/Interior renovation to an existing building depending on the scope of work.
- Adding an addition onto an existing building
- Replacing all or part of a foundation

Failing to obtain a permit prior to commencing construction can result in costly construction delays, removal of already completed work, legal action, fines, orders and double permit fees being laid.

DOING A RENO?

Reasons Building Permits are Required and Essential

- Improves safety
- Holds contractors and builders responsible for following minimum standards
- Peace of mind for the homeowner
- Ensure compliance with building code and local zoning regulations
- It's the Law

Failing to obtain a permit prior to commencing construction can result in costly construction delays, removal of already completed work, legal action, fines, orders and double permit fees being laid.

A building permit ensures that your project follows the Ontario Building Code.

Getting a building permit will avoid the risk of having your project stop if you are caught doing work without the proper permit. In some cases, getting a permit mid-project could cost more.

A building permit may eliminate unqualified contractors. Hiring a qualified contractor could make the project go smoother and some municipalities require contractors to be licensed and insured.

A building permit ensures that your project follows the municipal zoning and other applicable laws in your town.

Building codes can change with legislation, and a building permit makes sure that your renovation is up to the current code.

A building permit keeps your contractor honest. They may not cut corners on the job when they know it will be inspected by a building official.

If there is an accident on the job site, you have a greater chance of filing an insurance claim if you have a building permit.

When you have a building permit for your project, the municipality sends a building official to inspect the work to make sure it's being built safely and up to code.

Building permits are an official record that a renovation has been conducted and checked to be safe and sound by a qualified building official.

When your home is built to code under a building permit, your property may increase in value.
